

What is the Canadian Industrial Leadership Award (CILA)?

Together, L3Harris Canada, CAE Canada and Thales Canada are encouraging more diversity in today's workforce with our 2019 goal of advancing women in Canadian industry. We are committed to investing in future executives by providing mentorship as well as educational and leadership opportunities. In 2019 we are offering 10 awards to women in STEM University programs across Canada. Each award offers a fully paid internship, a $6,000 CAD award*, and an opportunity for employment after successful completion of the co-op/internship and corresponding degree. Each award recipient will be exposed to executive leadership and mentoring, will participate in cross-company learning activities and be involved in interesting project challenges to satisfy academic requirements and develop leadership skills.

CILA - What makes this award different?

- CILA is a full leadership experience that complements academic and career interests by providing exposure to company projects involved in electro-optics, software development, and aerospace engineering.
- CILA offers a collaborative, cross-company interactive experience to participate in networking opportunities and share best practices
- Recipients will work with nine other award winners across three major Canadian high-tech companies to learn more about the Aerospace, Maritime, Defence, and Security industries!
- CILA encourages recipients to be active in key company programs while being mentored by senior company executives. Students will be paired with STEM advisors who are aligned with specific projects that support their education. Collaboration with the University on specific R&D programs will help broaden the education experience.

Explore and develop your leadership potential!

Partner with one of three Leading Canadian Defence and Technology Companies and collaborate with 9 other students as part of CILA. It is much MORE than a scholarship! Prepare to "Reach for the Moon," literally!
